

A Little TLC To Create A Summer Getaway In Your Own Home

Just like with most things, a bit of planning and preventative care can make simply enjoying your property much easier.

Whether you're preparing your home for company traveling in for the summer or you just want to make a little staycation space for yourself, taking small steps is the best way to keep your home summer-ready without breaking your back or the bank.

When it comes to making your summer abode a staycation space - you want a home that you know will hold its own through the peak heat or storms of summer. An electrical safety inspection is a great way to give you that peace of mind.

Timely To-Do Check Lists For Easy Home Maintenance

Sometimes it's the little things that we forget to stay on top of that add up over time. While these things don't happen as frequently, it is still good to some of these tasks to some of your home maintenance plans to best care for your property and make it easier to enjoy, worry-free.

- Monthly - Inspect Your HVAC Filters
 - You'd be surprised how many efficiency problems and service calls could be potentially avoided with a little bit of HVAC TLC. Especially if you have pets that shed or family members with respiratory concerns, make sure to replace your HVAC filters monthly.
- Seasonally - Assess Your Electrical System Health
 - Peak season weather usually also means peak electrical system usage. If you're experiencing power surge issues or tripping breakers, that could be a symptom of a bigger electrical system problem. An electrical safety inspection can clear up any concerns.
- Quarterly - Test Your Smoke and Carbon Monoxide Detectors
 - Another often forgotten task is checking out your smoke and CO2 equipment. Find that test button, cover your ears, and verify your equipment is in good working order.
- Biannually - Deep Clean
 - We're not saying to have to scrub the baseboards every Saturday, but you do need to do your deep clean at least once every 6 months. Take the day to get everything sparkling like new - that way, lighter ongoing spot cleanings will help you to keep your home looking great for guests or just for yourself.
