

A Place In The Sun: Helping Your Home Endure The Heat

Usually, "finding your place in the sun" refers to truly making it and being perfectly content with your current situations and circumstances, personally or professionally.

You may be happy with your shining moment, but when your home is constantly standing in its place in the sun - it is taking quite the beating from the elements. Help your home find its place in the sun with the right care so that it can continue to keep you and your property looking its best and feeling its most comfortable.

Increased heat also usually means increased energy consumption from additional power required by your air conditioning systems. Make sure your home can take the stress with an electrical safety inspection.

Finishing The Summer Strong With Proper Home Care

The end of the summer tends to be the hottest part of the summer! Finish out the season strong by keeping your home strong!

- Check Those Outdoor Spigots, Hose Bibs, & Faucets
 - Water, stone, wood, vinyl, and fluctuating temperatures generally don't mix well. Outdoor water sources can, at best, chip away at your exterior finish or, at worst, cause some serious cracking. Check out those outdoor faucet areas and stay on top of that maintenance.
- Verify Outdoor Electronics Are Still Safe
 - Including old extension cords that have been pulled one too many times, loose-fitting exterior outlets, and outdoor electronics that have been run ragged all summer - you need to review that your outdoor electrical setup is still safe. You can also reduce the need for extra extension cord trip hazards with professionally installed outdoor GFCI outlets.
